Introduction

Whistle blowing has been defined as:

'the disclosure by an employee or professional of confidential information which relates to some danger, fraud or other illegal or unethical conduct connected with the work place, be it of the employee or his/her fellow employees' (Public Concern at Work Guidelines 1997).

Whistleblowing is a matter between employers and employees. The statutory protection for employees who whistleblows is provided by the Public Interest Disclosure Act 1998 (PIDA). The Act protects employees against victimisation if they make a protected disclosure and speak out about corruption or malpractice at work.

This policy applies to all staff.

Aims and Scope of Policy

- provide a member of staff with avenues to raise concerns
- ensure that a member of staff receives a response to the concerns they have raised and feedback on any action taken
- offer assurance that members of staff are protected from reprisals or victimisation for whistleblowing action undertaken in good faith.

Confidentiality

The Director will do his utmost to protect the identity of members of staff who raise a concern and do not want their name disclosed. However, the investigation into the concern could reveal the source of the information; and statements may be required from the member of staff as part of the evidence, which would be seen by all parties involved. If a whistleblower is unwilling to give a statement because of fear of disclosure of their identity but the Director remains concerned about the seriousness of the allegations they will discuss this with the member of staff and ask him/her to reconsider so that the matter can be taken forward.

Anonymous Allegations

Staff should put their name to allegations whenever possible; anonymous concerns are much less powerful. Nonetheless, wherever possible anonymous allegations will be considered under this whistleblowing procedure taking into account:

- the seriousness of the issue raised
- the credibility of the concern
- the likelihood of confirming the allegation from attributable sources and obtaining information provided.
